Don Quixote and Sancho Panza visit the place in which a woman takes on the active role, but this one.

In the paragon of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza and where a young woman, Mary, to whom Don Quixote, in his passion for chivalry, bestows the name of Dulcinea del Toboso, lives in poverty and hardship. The woman is the embodiment of chivalric ideals and is portrayed as a symbol of the perfect lady. Mary's life is marked by constant struggle, and her encounters with Don Quixote are often fraught with danger.

Despite Don Quixote's gallant efforts to rescue Mary and bring her to his ideal, the reality is far from the romantic vision he has of her. Their interactions are filled with humor and irony, as Don Quixote's chivalric values clash with the harsh realities of Mary's life.

This encounter is a reflection of the broader theme of the novel, which explores the clash between idealism and reality. Don Quixote's adventures are a metaphor for the search for the perfect ideal, which often leads to disappointment and frustration. Mary, on the other hand, represents the common person, struggling to make ends meet in a world that does not always reward virtue.

The interaction between Don Quixote and Mary is a poignant reminder of the limitations of chivalric ideals and the importance of practical considerations in real life. The novel invites the reader to reflect on the nature of heroism and the role of the individual in a world that often demands more than one can physically bear.
